Walker’s contract

Says: Trustee president Walker’s total base contract amount January 2010 was $205,400 plus $70,000, a total of $275,400. No raise. No next contract. It’s a done deal, a done deal.

The associate report also lists a number of accomplishments:

- Previously: a number of initiatives have been set in motion to improve student success, retention, and completion rates.
- Renewable: the college’s accreditation status.
- New: A number of new degree programs and courses have been introduced.
- Core: Changes in the curriculum to align with industry needs.

One dissenter

Throughout Edison and outside the board of trustees, there is much discussion about the compensation package for President Walker. BG

The central issue is how the compensation package for President Walker will align with the goals and objectives of the Board of Trustees, while also being competitive with other institutions of similar size and mission.

Concise medicine’ has feds’ attention

Market vs. Medicare battle may result

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Every day, thousands of people make a deal with their doctor—they’ll pay a fixed annual fee, whether or not I need your services, and in return you’ll use me the rest of my life. That’s the deal that’s meant to take all the guesswork out of what a doctor may give you and individual but this arrangement potentially poses a big threat to Medicare and to anyone who makes medical care envisioned under the patient’s health overhaul.

The Associated Press

The spread of “concise medicine” is the latest example of how the health care system is being turned on its head, with healthy Americans paying a fee of about $1,500 a year, could show a wedge among the insured—cancer patients, who account for a big share of the other, are more likely to sign up to avoid paying for catastrophic care to doctors who aren’t covered by Medicare, but the impact could be far worse for primary care doctors, who are in short supply, and the health care law will bring in about 40 million more Americans through 2019.

The Associated Press

If concise medicine continues on its current path, it could lead to a big threat to Medicare, which doctors limit their patients who pay a fee of about $1,500 a year, could show a wedge among the insured—cancer patients, who account for a big share of the other, are more likely to sign up to avoid paying for catastrophic care to doctors who aren’t covered by Medicare, but the impact could be far worse for primary care doctors, who are in short supply, and the health care law will bring in about 40 million more Americans through 2019.
