Big Funding Cuts Coming for Schools (P-12)

With P-12 budget cuts looming amid the coronavirus recession, what’s ahead and what’s the expected impact on students and schools? What types of disparate effects by race, ethnicity, and income level are likely and why? What new costs will public health considerations require? Experts provide journalists with insights, key questions to ask in their states and local communities, and point to resources they can use.

The Digital Divide: Bridging Home and School Connectivity Gaps (P-16)

COVID-19 has brought into stark relief inequities of access, often along lines of race and wealth, to digital devices and the internet. As social-distancing guidelines push schooling to expand into students’ homes, these gaps become more troubling than ever. What’s happening, what’s the impact, and what promising solutions are emerging?

How School Districts and Charters Responded to COVID-19: Early Results from a National Survey on Pandemic Response

The coronavirus pandemic required public education to make sudden, significant changes to teaching and learning for students across the country. To better understand how the pandemic affected K-12 education, the American Institutes for Research (AIR) is conducting the National Survey on Public Education’s Response to COVID-19, a nationally representative survey of more than 2,500 school districts and Charter Management Organizations (CMOs). At this session, AIR will release early results from the survey, including data on how school systems responded to the COVID-19 outbreak, how much instruction students received, and insights from district and CMO leadership. The data from the survey will help education leaders and policymakers as they plan for the 2020-21 school year. (Sponsored and organized by American Institutes for Research.)

Spotlighting Educational Inequity in COVID-19

The coronavirus pandemic exposed huge inequities in funding, access to digital tools and instructional delivery in K-12 public schools. These disparities disproportionately affect Black and Brown students, and students from low-income families. This session will spotlight the most pernicious gaps – especially the digital divide – and specific equity issues related to re-opening schools that serve these students. The session will also offer bright spots that are often untold in reporting on COVID-19. (Sponsored and organized by the National Alliance for Public Charter Schools.)

Why Build Culturally Sustaining Curricula For All?
Student-led demonstrations and calls for racial justice in the wake of George Floyd’s death have transformed our national dialogue about anti-racism and the role of education over the past several months. Despite extensive research showing that when students see themselves in lessons, they learn more, many subjects and curricula still don’t represent all students. With the variance in cultural contexts across the country, how should programs approach building curriculum for different subjects and cultures? From tackling why certain banned books like Dear Martin should be included in curriculum, to exploring what histories and narratives students are owed in the classroom, our conversation with author Nic Stone will discuss why and how schools can incorporate things like -- racial and ethnic identity, LGBTQ rights, and cultural divides in rural America -- into relevant curriculum at a time when America’s students are demanding change. EDUCATION POLICY AND POLITICS IN A PANDEMIC
Teacher Workforce Issues in a Time of Disruption (P-12)

The COVID-19 crisis is raising a host of complex issues for the nation’s teacher workforce. Teachers and their unions are voicing concerns over how safe is safe enough for millions of educators to return to school. Will the pandemic recession drive large-scale layoffs? How will these and other factors impact the quality of teaching in a time of massive educational disruption, and how will schools respond?

Job Training/Career Prep and the Pandemic (Higher Ed)

The pandemic and shutdown have wiped out an estimated 20 million jobs — many of them permanently. What should schools, especially community colleges, be doing to help those looking to improve their career prospects in today’s economy? How can CTE and certificate programs be retooled in the midst of a pandemic to help build valuable skills without endangering students?

What’s Next for Testing and Accountability? (K-12)

What are the implications for the coming school year and beyond, given the cancellation of 2020 end-of-year state testing and the anticipation of huge learning losses? Some states advocate dropping next year’s tests as well. What are other ways states and districts can measure accountability and evaluate student progress?

Beyond "Reopening": The Online-Blended-Hybrid Future of American Schools

Imagine it’s 2025. We’re beyond Covid-19 and education has adapted to a new reality that weaves together online, blended, hybrid learning and beyond. What stories will you be writing? Leading education visionaries Mickey Revenaugh, co-founder of Connections Academy online school who also helped launch e-Rate, and Michael Horn, author of Disrupting Class and most recently, Choosing College share their ideas about innovation, equity, and how learning might work for the future in this can’t miss session. (Sponsored and organized by Pearson.)

A Talk With ‘Classic Conservative’ Jeb Bush on Managing Through Crises

Jeb Bush, Florida’s governor from 1999 through 2007, managed the state through several natural disasters, pushed for increased educational accountability, championed school vouchers and banned affirmative action. Lately, he’s been critical of Republican political leaders. The Washington Post’s Moriah Balingit will lead a conversation on how he thinks educational leaders should be moving education forward during the pandemic.
Impacts of the Pandemic on Early Education (P-12)

The COVID-19 shutdown has taken a severe toll on child care and early learning facilities, many of which may never reopen. What are the implications for children, families, and K-12 educators who themselves will need child care this fall? How are home-based providers — and the predominantly Black and Brown women who run them — offering solutions to the ever-pressing child care problem?

P-16 Politics and the 2020 Presidential Election (P-16)

Journalists discuss how education is shaping up as a presidential campaign issue and how the pandemic and the national spotlight on racism are influencing and reshaping the candidates’ agendas, from early childhood and K-12 schooling to postsecondary education.

College Admissions and Enrollment (Higher Ed)

Widespread uncertainty over reopening this fall, the nation’s unfolding economic crisis, and rekindled efforts to fight systemic racism are forcing rapid and dramatic changes to the way colleges recruit and select students.
Special Education and the Pandemic (P-12)

The pivot away from in-person instruction this spring raised deep concerns about how to effectively serve students with disabilities remotely. What are key takeaways from the experience, both the troubling and promising responses from school systems? What should reporters focus on this fall to tell the story of special education in the pandemic?

Charter school
/ CHärd-r skool /

Charter schools are independently-operated public schools that have the freedom to design classrooms that meet their students’ needs. Charter schools are tuition-free and open to all students. They operate under a contract with a charter school authorizer—usually a nonprofit organization, government agency, or university—that holds them accountable to the high standards outlined in their “charter.”

There are millions of students stuck in schools that are not serving them well. Charter schools were created to be part of the solution. At a charter school, students gain as many as 108 days of learning in math and 78 days of reading.* 3.3 million students attend over 7,500 charter schools in 44 states and beyond. If given the chance, another 8.5 million students would attend a charter school if one were available to them.

We extend a special thank you to those who donated in memory of individuals who cared deeply about education journalism.

A just, inclusive, and healthy future for everyone. Especially our children.

In response to the unprecedented impact of COVID-19 on the educational system, we are providing support to educators to design and execute learning plans that are accessible, inclusive and support the wellbeing of all teachers and students.
